INAUGURAL ADDRESS

His Worship, Mayor Derek R. Corrigan delivered his Inaugural Address. The following is the text of the Mayor's address:

As Mayor, it is my privilege to deliver the inaugural address. This is the opportunity to report how things have gone this year, and what the priorities are for the future. But before I get started, it is important to note that behind these programs, these policies, these statistics, there are literally thousands of people working to make Burnaby a better place. I don't just mean the excellent staff and management team that work here. I mean all the community groups, business associations, non profit agencies, Block Watch groups, parent advisory committees, Streamkeepers and other community stewards that work to make Burnaby the best place it can be. This address is, in many ways, a reflection of all that work and effort, as well as an expression of the priorities of this community.

On behalf of Council, I think it is also appropriate to reflect upon what it is that we do, and who we do it for. Every child, youth, senior, immigrant, business owner, refugee, person with a disability or financial hardship, is the focus of our work as Mayor and Council. We represent their interests and our job is to make this city work for them. That is no small task. We have a very diverse population. The 2001 Census indicated that 47% of Burnaby residents are immigrants. Burnaby Family Life reports that there are over 100 different languages spoken in Burnaby, representing people from Afghanistan to Zanzibar. There is an incredible richness here that our citizens bring with them. It is precisely this diversity and uniqueness, that make this city so special and that we want to work to support and preserve.

And it is not only the community of today that we must work for, but the community of tomorrow, as we anticipate such things as sewer and water infrastructure replacement, new fire halls and swimming pools – things that must be budgeted, planned, executed and paid for. We must deal with unprecedented growth in a way that maintains the best of Burnaby while accommodating new opportunities.

Building activity has continued at unprecedented rates. We surpassed last year's record building permit level in the first ten months of this year, which topped $574 million. 48% of all new construction has been multiple family residential development.

I am very pleased to say that this growth has been directed according to our Official Community Plan, which accommodates new multi family development in town centres and urban villages, thereby protecting our established single and two family areas. Our Planning and Building Department, under the excellent leadership of Jack Belhouse, has done a phenomenal job in meeting the increased demand for permit processing and development-related activity, without compromising the quality and calibre of our new development.

The Brentwood Town Centre has seen a tremendous increase in development activity, and there is every sign that this will continue. The primary focus of this development is south of Lougheed between Madison and Gilmore, although we will also start to see more activity in the Central Valley with a new Costco, auto mall and completion of the long-awaited Still Creek Drive Road link beneath Willingdon Avenue. We have also seen the proposal of a multisport centre of excellence, which will be a positive contribution to our developing sports tourism sector.

A new neighbourhood officially Inaugurated on Burnaby Mountain this year when the first resident moved into the award-winning sustainable Highlands Neighbourhood at UniverCity, the new community at Simon Fraser University. Significant university campus development is also under construction.

The City has also been working with TransLink on the preliminary design for the LRT Line to Coquitlam Centre. A key priority will be ensuring that the LRT is successfully integrated with North Road and the existing SkyTrain Station. There is also a new high density mixed use project planned at the southwest corner of Cameron Street and North Road. The development will include two high rise residential towers, a child care facility, underground parking and major retailers.

This has been a period of tremendous change for the Edmonds area, with the new HighGate development - which has been very well received - the Inaugurating of the Taylor Park Elementary School and Byrne Creek Secondary School, significant redevelopment of older residential properties, and new sidewalks and streetlights throughout the area. Many other significant projects are underway which will support this growing population, including a new library and major mixed-use development at the corner of Kingsway and Edmonds, a new pool and expanded Eastburn Recreation Centre, and a new Community Policing Office. A plan for Edmonds Street is being developed which will include a comprehensive approach to urban design in the area and look to facilitate redevelopment of those vacant and non-commercial properties while recognizing those businesses that have been so vital to the area.

There are other issues in the Edmonds Town Centre that we have been grappling with over the last three years – issues of property crime, drugs and prostitution. We have chosen to take the hard line, forming the Task Force on Problem Properties to target and remove this criminal element. We've eliminated 65 problem houses in that area, almost all that were identified as being an issue, and we are actively pursuing the others.

The City has also consulted with community groups, agencies, and the public in the Edmonds area about health care, homelessness and food security, among other issues. While there is much we can do at the municipal level, and have done, the federal and provincial governments have a responsibility to address issues such as housing and health care. We have been pursuing discussions with both governments regarding partnerships to work collaboratively on a range of urban development issues, to bring all resources to bear on these issues.

The Big Bend is continuing its gradual evolution with the widening of Byrne Road from North Fraser Way to Marine Way, and the ongoing road construction in the vicinity of the Marine Way and Byrne Road to improve access to planned development in the area. In addition to the new retail shopping centre at Marine Way and Byrne Road, there are a number of new business and light industrial developments either underway or proposed. These include such uses as movie production facilities, light manufacturing, distribution and a range of other office and light industrial users that bring stability and growth to the Burnaby tax and employment base.

Protecting the lands along the Fraser River Foreshore in public ownership has been a long standing City objective. This year, the electorate approved protection of the City's most recent park acquisition on the Fraser River. The City now has all of the lands designated for the Burnaby Fraser Foreshore Park and has increased its total park lands in the Big Bend to 450 acres. The design for the Urban Trail system within the Park is underway, and when completed in conjunction with the development community, will provide a key riverside recreation site.

Growth places additional demands on our services, from parks and recreation opportunities to fire and police services to the infrastructure below our streets. Safety is always our first and number one priority. 2005 was a year of growth for the Burnaby RCMP Detachment under the strong leadership of Superintendent Carl Schmietenknop. The detachment received twelve new officers this year, increasing the force to 253 positions. This increase allowed for the establishment of a Problem Oriented Policing Unit, which focuses on dealing with problem or repeat situations. An additional 12 officers had been requested and will be received in 2006.

Our four Community Policing offices allow direct contact with the needs of their respective neighbourhoods, ensuring that policing priorities identified in the community are understood, identified and addressed. And, indeed, we have seen an overall drop in the crime rate in this city over the last year. Obviously, bringing it down further is a high priority for us. In addition to the increased Burnaby force, we also participate in regional RCMP services with the Integrated Homicide Team and the Emergency Response Team. We cost share these services with participating communities, as well as the provincial and federal governments.

The Fire Department, under the leadership of Chief John Stewart, has had another excellent year. We have retained an architect for the new No. 7 Fire Hall at Gilmore and Canada Way. A facilities review of the No. 1 Fire Hall is expected in the new year in order to assess needed administration and training space. Additional firefighting equipment was purchased this year, including an all terrain vehicle which has proven very beneficial by allowing our firefighters to access remote areas of the City. Maintaining excellent service and response times remains a top priority for the Department.

In addition to safety, providing resources for life long learning is also a priority. There were over two million user visits to our public libraries in the last year. Under the guidance of the Burnaby Public Library Board - citizen volunteers appointed by City Council - as well as the Chief Librarian, Edel Toner-Rogala - library staff have been focusing on enhancing the community's access to library services - bringing the library to even more people by promoting 24/7 access through Internet services - the use of which has increased nearly 30% from 2003 - holding events in conjunction with groups like the Canadian Red Cross, and piloting programs such as the conversation circles held at the Metrotown branch this fall. The conversation circles promote language skills for residents learning English, while enhancing their knowledge and use of the library's collection and services.

The library's annual Summer Reading Club had over 6,400 children registered this year. In addition, the library has also become more involved in early childhood development initiatives - including programs which focus on ensuring that all of Burnaby's children are ready to learn to read by grade one. The library is also working with community groups and the School District to develop a strategy of meeting the needs of school aged children, aged 6 to 12.

We are very proud of Burnaby's library facilities – they are well located public spaces, have wonderful collections, and provide key resources and access to technology for our community members. The new Edmonds library branch is in the planning stages at this time. We will be engaging the community in the design process to ensure that their desires are reflected in the finished library, and to encourage community ownership of what will be our newest library branch.

Nearly 25% of our city is in parks and Inaugural space, and the Parks, Recreation and Cultural Services is one of the City's largest departments. Under the experienced guidance of the Parks, Recreation and Cultural Commission and Chair Leslie Roosa, as well as Director Kate Friars, we have seen a steady increase in our parkland, with the continued acquisition of key sites.

We have also continued a steady investment in upgrading our recreational facilities. Construction of a lit synthetic turf sports field for school and community use was completed at the new Byrne Creek Secondary School in south east Burnaby. A feasibility study for the design of an artificial field at Burnaby North Secondary School has also been approved by the Commission. We are also happy to report that progress is being made on the new clubhouse at Riverway.

Bonsor Recreation Centre is undergoing a second stage of renovations to provide a yoga studio and much needed multi-purpose space. We are also prepared to initiate the process to replace the pool and improve the parking areas at Bonsor, in order to better meet the needs of the facility users.

The replacement and upgrading of playgrounds at several locations throughout the city has occurred over the last year, including the inclusive Variety Park Children's Playground at Central Park, which is getting revamped to its new theme, "Exploring the Forest".

Providing public facilities is something I believe we do very well. We also need to do what we can to ensure that everyone has the opportunity to use them. To that end, the Service Credit Program continues, offering access to program registrations or passes at nearly all of our parks, recreation or cultural services facilities. We also offer a number of low or no cost summer programs for youth at outdoor pools, parks and rec centres.

The City has adopted an Art in Public Places Program and Policy to determine appropriate locations, acquisitions and promotions for public art. Facilitating community art projects is a means to engage more members of the community in a fun and creative way. The award-winning eco-sculpture program is an excellent example of this, having been done in conjunction with students and other community members. We now have a carousel horse, three salmon and two cranes, all rendered in plant material on a metal frame.

The Engineering Department, under experienced Director Craig Sinclair, has the responsibility of ensuring that our roads and sidewalks are maintained, that our water is delivered and removed, and that all our garbage and recycling is taken care of. I'm always very glad that he and his staff do those things very, very well.

With funding from the federal and provincial governments, the City has embarked on a comprehensive program of sewer separation in North Burnaby, thus eliminating these overflows. The 2005 program included works in the Willingdon/Capital Hill and Westridge areas.

Traffic and transportation are of key concern to Burnaby residents. Being in the centre of the region brings more than its fair share of commuter traffic, with many potential impacts on our neighbourhoods. Working with the Ministry of Transportation, we have vastly improved the Sprott and Highway #1 interchange and the City also signalized and reconstructed the Edmonds and Sixth Street intersection.

It is also necessary to provide alternative transportation for those that choose to walk, bike or use public transit, so it is not only safe, but welcoming and enjoyable to use. Alternative transportation is also critical in managing the region's traffic issues. In addition to the ongoing construction of the Sea-to-River Bikeway, two other bikeways are planned for the Cariboo and South Slope areas. The Central Valley Greenway is also under construction in Burnaby, and when completed in 2007 will provide a safe and scenic bicycle and pedestrian facility from False Creek in Vancouver to Coquitlam and the New Westminster Quay. We have also been working with TransLink on a number of programs to enhance ridership throughout the city. The City is committed to undertaking a comprehensive dredging program to provide long-term protection and enhancement of the Burnaby Lake ecosystem and to restoring rowing opportunities in the lake. This year we initiated the Lake Rejuvenation Project with the intent to implement the project in the summer of 2006, subject to final funding commitment from the provincial and federal governments.

We are committed to enhancing our natural environment through habitat restoration projects, including the reclamation of asphalt for bioponds in one instance in the Brentwood Town Centre. Biodiversity and invasive species studies have been conducted for Still Creek. We continue to work with the community stewards and Streamkeepers to protect our riparian areas and returning salmon stocks.

The City adopted a Total Stormwater Management Policy to guide development projects within the City to improve stormwater management through flow reduction, absorbent landscape design and impervious area reduction. The policy is a holistic approach in the context of environmental protection and stream preservation, and has been applied in UniverCity and other development projects in the City. A bylaw restricting the amount of pervious surfaces permitted has also been developed.

We have made a significant investment in energy retrofits for City buildings and facilities. We expect this to result in a 15% reduction in energy use, a reduction of nearly 1,700 tonnes of greenhouse gases, and a savings of $500,000 per year. This means that our initial investment of $6.3 million will be repaid within 11 years.

We continue to work actively with the City's four business and merchant groups: the Burnaby Board of Trade, Heights Merchants Association, Edmonds Town Centre Business and Community Association and the North Road BIA. Each of these groups not only supports but initiates steps to enhance their community, to make them successful commercial centres. The uniqueness of each group reflects the diverse communities that exist here and the unique projects and programs that all of these organizations develop. There is strength and economic resiliency in this diversity, and we need to continue to foster and develop it. This has been one of the messages of the Economic Development Strategy currently underway with a broad based steering committee representing the many different sectors of our community.

What's on the horizon for us? Where do we go from here? Our Economic Development Strategy will certainly help shape that vision. We also know what significant projects we must start planning for: a renewed RCMP headquarters, a fire hall in the Big Bend area, a new Works Yard, a new CG Brown pool and a pool in Lougheed Town Centre.

But in preparing for the future, we must not neglect our past. We continue to make strides in preserving and enhancing our collective heritage through our heritage planning program, museum and archives working in concert with our community partners. The Community Heritage Commission has accomplished a number of important projects, including the designation of several new privately held city heritage sites and the publication of the very popular "In the Shadow by the Sea", a history of Burnaby's Barnet village. The completion of Burnaby's World War II Honour Roll was a special project that honoured our hometown heroes during the Year of the Veteran. The Land Conservancy of B.C. will see the completion of the Eagles Estate Heritage Garden Project and another year operating the a guest house in the modern heritage building known as the Baldwin House in Deer Lake Park. The Friends of Interurban #1223 have nearly completed a marvellous restoration of this important Burnaby artifact and we will be building a tram barn to ensure its future care, public access and enjoyment as part of our village museum. Our civic archives also continue to grow, as does their use, and we have hosted many other jurisdictions interested in recreating our approach to records management and archival systems.

The archives are managed through the Clerk's Department under the capable leadership of City Clerk Debbie Comis. The Clerk's Department has also successfully implemented a new on-line system to check voter registration for this year's municipal elections. Going "high tech" seems to be the theme for the City Clerk, as live web streaming of Council meetings will be implemented in the coming year. An on-line archive of Council meetings will also be generated, and linked to Council agendas such that a user can "jump" from the agenda to that specific part of the meeting, thereby enhancing our citizens' ability to get information about their City 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. The new on-line Community Asset Mapping project and the comprehensive BurnabyMap, also provide residents access to detailed information about resources, facilities, property and demographics in the city.

With all of this, it's important not to forget that the City is also a business, and we are accountable to the bottom line. Under the expert guidance of Finance Director Rick Earle, I'm very pleased to say that both our residential and business tax rates remain very competitive with our neighbouring municipalities. Our reserves are healthy and adequate for the parkland purchase, equipment replacement and infrastructure renewal that is planned over the next several years. We have also expanded the use of the Gaming Reserve Funds to include projects that have a safety and security component, or support or further arts and culture, as well as the original allocation for historical and environmental projects. The five year term of the current budget utilizes $30 million in gaming reserve funded projects to support the construction of the Central Valley Greenway, Interurban Tram Building, urban trails and park development.

The Enterprise Resource Planning project is replacing the City's business systems. This multi-departmental project will take approximately two years to complete, but will result in better quality service to our residents and staff.

As I said at the outset, the program and projects that I've touched on tonight are the result of the tremendous effort of staff and our management team. Overseeing all of this is our City Manager, Bob Moncur, and our Deputy City Manager, Chad Turpin. Their efforts to keep our departments working together and responsive to the needs of our citizens are always appreciated.

We are also appreciative of our strong and solid relationship with our Civic Employees' Union and Firefighters' Association. Their efforts continually strive to make Burnaby the excellent place it is to live, work and play in.

I also want to offer our thanks to Councillors Celest Redman and Doug Evans for their many years of dedicated service to our community. Both have served on Council for 15 years, and in that time have represented the interests of their constituents at an exemplary level. Councillor Redman has played a significant role in the revitalization of the Heights, and brought the needs of residents to the fore with her years of work on the Housing Committee, to name but two of her many accomplishments. Councillor Evans was instrumental in bringing Community Policing to Burnaby, something that has fundamentally changed the face of policing in our city. His role in the Traffic and Transportation Committees has also been extremely valuable. On behalf of Council, as well as the citizens of Burnaby, we thank you both.

As we embark on our next term, I want to recognize the tremendous efforts of our returning Councillors, Pietro Calendino, Sav Dhaliwal, Dan Johnston, Colleen Jordan, Lee Rankin and Nick Volkow. It has been my pleasure to serve with these dedicated individuals, each of whom serve on numerous committees, represent the City in liaison positions, and work to achieve the vision of this City held by our citizens. I also want to welcome Gary Begin and Garth Evans, who join us in the mission to make our city the best place it can be. We have an obligation to put the needs of our citizens at the forefront of every decision we make. I'm proud of our history together. We have accomplished a great deal, and I know the next three years will provide new challenges and new opportunities. Working together we can continue to make Burnaby the most progressive and responsible city in the province. Thank you for being with us tonight as we begin a new term of office.
